

David Sorenson Project Manager

As a project manager, David Sorenson is a team player whose responsibilities range from initial site planning and analysis through the various design phases. David is involved with both schematic and design development and sees every project through to the construction document phase, including comprehensive building code analysis. Throughout this entire process, David's main focus is on delivering a project that meets and exceeds the client's program, function, and economic needs.

The diversity of clients and projects range from working on non-profit, office/warehouse, medical/healthcare and multi-family/senior housing.

With a five-year professional Bachelor of Architecture degree from Iowa State University, David has five years experience of related construction and field administration to go along with his architectural background. David joined Genesis Architecture in 1997. Prior to that, he worked as an Architect at Phillips-Klein Companies of Minneapolis.
